West Yorkshire Police, Cybercrime Team

West Yorkshire Police Cybercrime Team have now enrolled a Protect Delivery Officer to safeguard businesses and schools against online crime.

The Protect Delivery Officer is responsible for ensuring businesses and schools are cyber protected. The Protect arm of the team is to reduce vulnerabilities around technology. The role itself, which has never been done before at a Force level, is part of the “Regionally Managed-Locally Delivered” government strategy, born out of a £1.9 billion investment to help safeguard Britain’s businesses. PC Rob Cowgill, who is the current Force Protect Delivery Officer for West Yorkshire Police, appeals to businesses to invite him to provide user education and awareness sessions to their staff, which are FREE of charge. The sessions provide advice around the national messages, which are backed by the National Police Chiefs Council. Some of the messages consist of providing advice around the following: passwords, software and app updates, backing up data, public WIFI, phishing, and reporting to Action Fraud. All the messages and advice given is based on the national guidance from the National Cyber Security Centre (NCSC).
